AFTERNOON TEA

In eighteenth-century England, tea mania swept the country. Tea was sipped by all levels of society, becoming the beverage of choice for breakfast and after the main meal of the day.

Prior to the introduction of tea in Britain, the English had two main meals, breakfast and dinner. Breakfast consisted of ale, bread and beef, while dinner was a substantial meal at the end of the day.

Anna Maria, the 7th Duchess of Bedford (1788-1861) experienced a “sinking feeling” in the late afternoon.

Embracing the European tea service format, she invited friends to join her for additional bread and butter sandwiches, assorted sweets, and of course, tea. This summer ritual proved so popular, the Duchess continued it when she returned to London, sending cards to friends to come for “tea and a walking of fields”. The practice of inviting friends to “take in the afternoon” was soon adopted by other hostesses. A customary pattern of service emerged.
